

AIM Legislative Roundup – May 13, 2022

Legislatures have adjourned in more than half of the states and continue to wind down. According to the tracker from the National Conference of State Legislatures, 19 states remain in session with seven of those states meeting year-round. The latest count from colleagues at ASTHO indicates that 228 vaccine-related bills were introduced this year, along with a roughly equal number that carried over from last year. Of bills introduced this year, the vast majority are no longer under active consideration - with 61 failing by a vote and most of the rest not considered before adjournment. Twenty-nine bills have been enacted, and about three dozen are still pending and have passed at least one chamber.

For those states still in session, AIM's policy team stands ready to assist as needed – contact Brent Ewig at bewig@immunizationmanagers.org for help. Later this summer AIM will create another full review to provide an overview of state legislative trends. Finally, the latest installment of AIM's Policy Tips in 2 Minutes series focuses on opportunities to build relationships with policymakers year-round.
